9 July 1954APPENDIX BEXTRACT FROM JACKSON COMMITTEE REPORT

Part II, Chapter 6, page 87: "The greatest limitation on effective covert activity is the shortage of skilled personnel. Although the total personnel strength of CIA is probably adequate, only a small part of it is as yet qualified to plan and carry out covert operations effectively and securely. The Committee recommends that for the immediate future CIA give higher priority to training, development of improved operating principles, and expansion of its pool of qualified operators. In making this recommendation, the Committee recognizes that such a policy might reduce CIA's current capabilities. It would mean, however, that within two or three years its capabilities for secure and effective operations should be greatly enhanced."

Chapter 7, page 102: "More specifically, better efficiency and morale in the ranks of the public service will, in our view, depend upon new efforts to:

"1. Improve training programs for those entering into the field of national security affairs so as to provide not only greater technical competence and language and area knowledge but also a broader understanding of the significance of their own assignments."
